M'DOW ON THE STAND.

He Says He Killed Captain Dawson Purely in Self Defense.

HIS STORY OF THE CRIME.

Attempt to Hide the Body. THRILLING SCENE IN THE COURT ROOM

The Captain's Attack on Rim and Ris

SPECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE DISPATCH.] CHARLESTON, S. C., June 26 .- The interest in the great murder trial increases. It was intensified to-day by the appearance of Dr. McDow upon the witness stand. The day was bright and hot. The court room was pasked almost to suffocation. Dr. Me-Dow took his seat within the bar at about 9:30. He was greeted by many of his friends and entered into a lively conversation with them. "Hats off," shouted a Deputy Sheriff, and Mr. Cohen, counsel for the defense, arose to his work. He made no opening, "Call Geo. Washington Harper," he said. The eyes of the blacks in the audience began to glisten. Harper is the colored coachman who heard the pistol shot in Dr. McDow's office and who was not placed upon the stand tleman alight from a horse car and go to Dr. McDow's office. Five minutes after he Dubois whether she had anything to say disappeared the coachman said he heard the | why judgment should not be pronounced report of pistol. A long, loud groan fol- against her she turned to her lawyer and lowed. Then he heard some one shout in an | said. "My counsel will speak for me." excited tone of voice:

have taken yours!

As the witness left the stand Governor McGrath arose with stately dignity. He said: "Your Honor, according to the law of the State and to the practice in the South Carolina courts, the accused wishes to be allowed to state the circumstances of this

M'DOW ON THE STAND.

Judge Kershaw bowed and Dr. McDow arose and walked to the witness box. All eyes were upon him; every fan ceased waving. The Doctor was sworn and sat down as straight as an arrow. He wore a light four-in-hand tie and a dark suit. He was quite pale. He placed his right hand was quite paie. He placed his right hand upon his knee and rested the other upon his hip. He was apparently very cool and showed no signs of agitation. After giving his name and residence, he said that he well remembered the 12th of March last. It was impressed upon his memory, because on that day he killed Captain Dawson. He had known the Captain by sight, but had never had any conversation with him until that day. His feeling toward him was pleasant. There was no reason why it should be otherwise. He said:

pleasant. There was no reason why it should be otherwise. He said:

I met him that day in the vestibule of my house. I was in the sitting room upstairs when I heard the sound of the gong. As I was waiting for dinner I did not wait for a servant to open the door. I opened it myself. Captain Dawson." Walk in, Captain," I answered. He had a domineering air and was aggressive and irritable. As we entered the office the Captain said: "Dr. McDow," I have just been informed of your ungentlemanly conduct to one of my servants." I replied: "That I have been ungentlemanly to one of your servants is untrue." I felt indignant at the words. The Captain was a large, muscular man. I was a mere pigmy at his side. He next said: "I give you, to understand, sir, that she is under my protection and I forbid you to speak to her." I replied that I should speak to her when I pleased and until he showed some authority for his interference. He said: "If you speak to her again I shall publish you in my paper." I replied: "If you do, you infernal scoundrel, I shall hold you responsible. Now get out of my office." He instantly struck me over the bead with his cape. At the same time he used his fist and knocked me across the lounge.

M'Dow's STORY OF THE MURDER.

M'DOW'S STORY OF THE MURDER.

These answers were brought out by Gov-ernor McGrath in a very impressive manernor McGrath in a very impressive man-ner. The counsel for the prosecution were nettled, and began to protest against his putting leading questions to the accused. The doctor continued his evidence.

The doctor continued his evidence.

While I was endeavoring to resume my footing and arise from the sofa the Captain followed me up and struck me again on the head with his cane. The blow left a slight contusion upon the left side of my hea. I was afraid of losing my life. I did not knew but what the next blow would kill me. I was positive that I was about to receive severe bodily harm. My impulse was to save myself. I had a pistol in my hip pocket. I used it for protection. I arose in close proximity to the Captain and fired. He seemed to be in front of me.

Judge McGrath (sternly)—What do you mean, sir, by saying he seemed to be?

He was in front of me, but I have a confused idea of the exact situation. I habitually carry a pistol because I think it necessary. I had put the pistol into my pocket that morning. As soon as the shot was fired the Captain groaned and I cried: "You have tried to take my life, sir, and now I have taken youra." He staggered toward the desk in the back of the office and fell in the angle of the room between the bookcase and the wall. I stood for a moment dumfounded. I then felt of his pulse. The idea of calling in medical attendance flashed through my mind, but I saw that he was dying: that he was in fact already dead. I lost all self-control after I had fired the shot. I was not aware that the pistol was pointed at any vital part of the body. The shot was fired, not for the purpose of killing him, but for my own protection. I would have preferred to disable him, I felt that he had insulted me, and that an unprovoked injury had been done to me. If possible I would have restored him to life but the wound was fatal and he was dead. I was horrified and bewildered, for I well knew of the scandal that was sure to follow the occurrence. In my despan I first hid his hat and cape in the sink in the yard where they were afterward found. I next

TRIED TO CONCEAL THE BODY in the dark closet. I had no control over my reason. I scarcely knew what I did. I lifted the body by the arms and drew it in the hall. I then drew the nails from the door of the closet and tore up the flooring. Finding that there was not time enough to hide the body under the floor, I got a spade and dug a hole. I threw the earth against the scantlings and placed the body in the hole. I got the spade from the stable. It required much exertion to lift the body and drag it into the closet. After it had been placed in the hole I realized that my actions were foolish and altogether wrong. The unwonted exertion seemed to have restored my reason. I was entirely exhausted and went out for air. I made up my mind to return the body to the office and surrender myself. I came back and made several efforts to remove the body from the hole. I took it by the hand and tried to raise the head, but I could not. I was too much fatigued. As the closet was quite dark I went out and bought a candle. When I returned I lighted the candle and again tried to extricate the body. The head lay under a beam on a piece of flooring. With hard work I managed to draw the body out of the hole. The scratches and altrasions that appeared upon the forehead were made while getting it out of the closet. I drew the body back to my office and left it lying near the door. I brushed the sand from my clothes and wiped the blood from my face. The blood came from the mouth and nose of the corpse while it was lying in the closet. I bitterly regretted the secsisity that compelled me to kill Captain Dawson. I was nearly crazy. I wandered over the house, and walked up and down the room pulling my hair. I finally determined to surrender myself immediately. I gave myself up to Polloeman Gordon, who drove me to the station house. There I was manacled and carried to the jail in the patrol wagon. I protested against this indignity, but was told that it was done according to the law and I must submit. body in the hole. I got the spade from the stable. It required much exertion to lift the

Mr. McDow continued as follows: Mr. McDow continued as follows:

1 knew who Dawson meant when he referred to the servant and said I had not acted gentlemanly toward her. He meant the woman who had acted as governess for his children. She was the same woman who was on the stand yesterday, and yesterday was the first time I have seen her since Captain Dawson's death. I have said I shot Captain Dawson's death. I have said I shot Captain Dawson for self-protection. He was using his cane and his flag and the pistol was the only available means of defense that I had about me. I could not escape from Captain Dawson nor fly from him. He notonly had me in his power, but I thought possibily that he might have a weapon upon his person. If he had addressed me courteously he would have been breated differently. I had received him pleasantly and my courtesy was not returned.

Mr. Smith conducted the cross-examinations the witness said that he graduated from the Cumberland University, in Tennesee, in 1874. Soon after that he went to the upper part of South Carolina to live. After living there three years he came to Charleston. Soon after graduation he taught school for awhile. He afterward studied medicine with his number.

with his uncle.

Mr. Smith-Did you not leave Tenness. because you had a difficulty there?

The prisoner's counsel objected. Mr.
Smith insisted that he had a right to scrutinize the life of the prisoner and ascertain his moral character, so as to allow the jury to form an opinion as to his credibility. The Judge ruled against him after a long argument and Mr. Smith finally gave up the at-

Beautiful Flend Sentenced for Shock ingly Burning a Child-She Gives the Judge a Sample of Her

Vixenish Spirit. REPECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE DISPATCH. NEW YORK, June 26 .- Mrs. Annie Dubois, who burned her 7-year-old stepdaughter, Della, cruelly with a red-hot hair-curling iron, was arraigned to-day in the General Session before Judge Martine to receive sentence under her plea of guilty. When Mrs. Dubois approached the bar it was difficult to realize that she had treated a child so barbarously. She is still an attractive young woman and she was attired in a fashionable gown of green cloth, with a hat by the prosecution. He said he saw a gen- to match and new tan covered gloves on her small hands. When the clerk asked Mrs. urged clemency on the ground that she "As you said you would to my life, I had never before been convicted of any criminal offense. Taking up the photograph of the burned child and holding it before him for a moment Judge Martine "You were permitted to plead guilty o assault in the third degree, simply because your little victim was so young and be-sides in such a weak mental condition that sides in such a weak mental condition that it is doubtless if her testimony could have been permitted on your trial. I have not seen the child but I have here a photo which is a sickening proof of your fiendish cruelty to her. The crime was an outrageous one. The poor child, particularly because of her mental infirmity, should have appealed to your sympathy and care if you had the heart of a good woman. But you had not. Your whole conduct shows that you have a most wicked and cruel disposition. In the acceptance of your plea all of the consideration that you are entitled to, and far more, has been shown to you. I deeply regret has been shown to you. I deeply regret indeed, that it was, of necessity, shown to you. I shall impose the full penalty possible under your plea. I sentence you to the penitentiary at hard labor for one year and to pay a fine of $500, you to stand committed. day for each dollar, until the fine is paid. I will add that you need not send any one to me to have the fine remitted for I shall never remit it. I propose that unless the fine is paid you shall serve a day for each delice of it." dollar of it.

"Thank you," snapped Mrs. Dubois spitefully, as she turned from the bar.

LOSS OF THE RAILROADS.

The Pennsylvania Company Will Have to Expend Nearly $2,000,000. PHILADELPHIA, June 26 .- The Board of Directors of the Pennsylvania Railroad to-day held their first meeting since the recent floods. The result of the examination of the several main lines was discussed, and while no accurate estimate was submitted as to the cost of making repairs and placing the property in the same condition as it was before the flood, reports su fficiently in detail were presented to show that on all the lines of the Pennsylvania Railroad system, including the Philadelphia and Eric Railroad and the Northern Central Railway, the
